

A natural corridor between The Vegas of Antequera and Granada, historically a route between the Guadalquivir region and the steppes and mountains area of Andalucía. The northeastern region of Málaga is located in a central position, in a crossroad of routes and cultures.

We can divide this territory into three very differentiated zones: the northern zone formed by the villages of Cuevas Bajas, Cuevas de San Marcos, Villanueva de Tapia and Villanueva de Algaidas; Archidona situated in the centre of the region; and Villanueva del Rosario and Villanueva del Trabuco, located in the southern zone where the landscape has great importance with a chain of mountains that cross the province of Málaga.

Villanueva del Rosario was formed from the uniting of several small villages. It's popularly known as 'Saucedo'. This village is located on the lower slopes of Los Camarolos Mountains, between magnificent open spaces where visitors can enjoy natural resources. Remains of prehistoric paintings and settlements from earlier times have been found in the area. The historic centre of the village has some charming narrow streets where visitors can find small squares and the most important buildings of the village.
